Program Description

One of the most frequently studied periods of history is the era surrounding and involving the Second World War. It retains a fascination that has never fully waned, seen in countless documentaries, historical monographs, movies, novels, comic books and even video games. The term Nazi has become interchangeable with villain and almost anyone can identify the aesthetic and iconography of the Nazi regime. Additionally, this era has left the world with questions that are still being grappled with. How did the Nazis manage to rise to power? Was a global conflict inevitable? How could an event as horrific as the Holocaust come about? Those, among countless other questions, continue to hold the attention not just of academics, but of vast swaths of the population.

Among those questions, the issue of what beliefs the Nazi regime actually stood for and how it convinced Germans – as well as citizens abroad – to support those ideas, remains central. And vital to that question is the issue of how the Nazis were able to systematically capture, subvert and dismantle the culture, society, and legal apparatus of Germany, from beer halls to the halls of government, which frequently endorsed and supported Nazi actions that would have been considered illegal or inconceivable scant years or even months earlier. This intersection of law and lawlessness is a fascinating one and a question that has taken on more relevance today than at any point since the guns of war fell silent.

Central to all of these issues is the German capital of Berlin, the seat of the government the Nazis took control of and the capital of their proposed thousand-year empire. During Fall 2022 we will look deeper into the questions surrounding fascism and Nazism on campus, and then in Winter Break 2022-23 we will look closer at how German history, culture and jurisprudence interacted with the Nazi regime on site in Berlin. This abroad will look deeply at that intersection of law and lawlessness and ask questions that are relevant not only to understanding the world that the Nazis inhabited, but our modern world as well. Far-right political movements have gained more influence today than they have in years and the lessons of Weimar Germany and the Nazi era seem both closer and more distant than ever before.

Program Staff

This program will be directed by Dr. Peter van Lidth de Jeude. In addition to serving as Associate Professor of History at Principia College and having extensive experience teaching both German history broadly and the history of fascism and Nazism specifically, Dr. van Lidth de Jeude grew up in Germany and received his pre-collegiate education in German schools, leaving him incredibly familiar with both German culture and language. He also did his research for his dissertation in Berlin, living there for just under a year and thus having extensive familiarity with both the city and its people – not to mention its bakeries. Dr. van Lidth de Jeude has a BA from Principia College, an MA from the University of North Carolina Greensboro, and a PhD from Pennsylvania State University, all in History.

Will Buchanan will be supporting the program as drop-in faculty, both during the fall semester preceding the abroad and the three weeks in country. Mr. Buchanan previously led a successful International Field Experience to Berlin connected to a course on Jurisprudence, providing him with both experience and contacts to connect to this specific topic. He has a BA from Principia College and a JD from the University of Michigan Law School.

Katie Stanley is delighted to be embarking on her second Principia study abroad as an RC. When not travelling, Katie lives just outside Chicago taking thousands of photographs, hosting a never-ending stream of house guests, and spending lots of time writing, reading, and drawing in a blue paisley chair in her living room. Previous to living in Chicago, Katie spent 10 years working for Principia in their admissions, marketing, and media departments. Although she'll miss her husband and their two cats, she can't wait to spend time getting to know fellow abroad members, brushing up her German, and sampling pastries in Berlin.

Academics

A total of 7 semester hours of credit will be earned with this program: 3 SH during Fall 2022, 3 SH during Winter Break 2022-23, and 1 SH during Spring 2023. Final grades for all courses will be determined by the program faculty.
